

A Cup of Art with Luba

...every Saturday morning.

Beginning June 2, 2012, A Cup of Art will be my weekly reflection upon art—the metaphor is self-explanatory, it's actualization not so apparent.

Here's the deal.

You have a standing invitation to join me every Saturday morning as I pour images of art that pendulate among collages of asymmetric dualities, such as:

seriousness and play,
chaos and order,
permanence and change,
sacred and profane,
depth and surface,
being and becoming,
reality and illusion,
identity and difference, presence and absence,
clarity and confusion,
light and darkness,
meaning and absurdity,
spirit and body,
original and imitation,
mind and matter,
and truth and error,

right to the edge of sanity and back to the abyss of madness—just a single cup of art at a time, mind you!—and then reflect upon the bewildering, amusing, yet dazzling maze that digests its profound and inevitable way through each of us in our discordant struggle with the eternal yet timely thirst for beauty and meaning.

Join me—won't you?—each Saturday morning, and let's enjoy A Cup of Art together.
